Loneliness among elderly people is a major problem in Japan. According to Text (ii), elderly people report having fewer friends, and there are fewer elderly people than before who talk to other people every day. In addition, the number of elderly people living alone is increasing. This is a problem because Text (i) explains that the quality of our social connections with other people has a major influence on our health.

I think one way this problem could be solved would be to encourage families to live with their grandparents. In the past, this was typical in Japan, but now it is less common. This could be encouraged by, for example, having lower taxes for people who live in such households. It could also be encouraged by promoting remote working, so that people do not need to move away from their families to take up jobs in major cities.
